Obeys that Impulse

Hoosier Kitchen Cabinets

$1 a Week

Letter From a Wise Woman—With apologies to LIFE

I was troubled with gloomy thoughts.

During the night I frequently would get up and walk around the house.

I shed tears on the slightest provocation.

Seven doctors had operated on me.

I had pains in my mind and disposition and was a burden to everybody.

I avoided my husband except on pay day.

Everybody disliked me.

I felt that it wasn't much use and decided to end it all.

One day by accident I happened to pass a furniture store and saw a Hoosier Kitchen Cabinet.

I went in and examined it as if in a dream. Mechanically I heard the words, "obey that impulse and send it home."

I had tried everything else.

As a last resort I paid my first little dollar—I became a Hoosier user.

Pretty soon I began to notice a change.

I had not turned the crank shaft of the flour bin twice before I began to pick up.

The color came back to my faded cheeks.

I caught myself laughing on several occasions in spite of myself.

I gained rapidly in weight.

Now I am Queen of Joy.

My complete recovery is due to the fact that I had Faith, obeyed the impulse and became a regular

Hoosier User

Having found the "easy way to easy work" I use it daily to displace that tired feeling—I am cured.

Yes, gentle reader there is a moral to this story. For those who would have it explained we have all the necessary information on tap at this store.

Mark Twain and Edward VII.

"The Interpreter," writing in the July American Magazine, recounts the following anecdote concerning Mark Twain and Edward VII:

"He was such a human person! He was so lacking in self-consciousness. He wasn't a bit afraid of showing his pride in the honors that came to him. He told with a great deal of unaffected glee of lunching with the late king of England and of what the king said to him. Times have changed since Dr. Johnson started to his feet in the royal library and went through an experience that was afterward so trying to Dr. Goldsmith's temper. Mark's encounter with royalty was in no sense awful. He and the king were in the same German town taking the cure, and the king asked him to lunch and he went. Years before that Mark had written an article in which he appealed to the prince of Wales to correct some fault which he had observed in a royal progress or something. I forget now what it was all about. Anyhow, Mark wrote that the prince of Wales would remember him as the man in a linen duster sitting on top of a 'bus and smoking a cigar. Now, I never read that the king was much addicted to literature. The only remark I have ever heard attributed to him was that he said to Sidney Lee: 'I hear you are writing a book. Well, keep it up—if it pays.' But evidently he had read Mark Twain, for when Mark was presented to him, I'm very glad to say you again. 'But did we ever meet before?' said Mark. 'Why, don't you remember?' said the king. 'I recall very distinctly, ten or twelve years ago, seeing you on top of a 'bus in a linen duster, smoking a cigar.' Mark liked to tell his story, and I think it is as creditable an anecdote about a king as I ever read. Mark never fully realized how widely known, read and repeated he was."

The Champlain Association's Outing.

The burning of Hotel Burlington at Bluff Point has made impossible the annual outing which many Vermonters have become accustomed to take under the auspices of the Vermont Fish and Game league, and in view of the practical abandonment of this custom by the organization in question, we would suggest that a splendid substitute for this outing may be presently as well as permanently found in the summer outing of the Lake Champlain association, which performance will be compelled to select some spot on the lake for its annual gatherings of this kind.

The members of this association, their families and their guests will rendezvous on August 3, next, at the ruins of famous Fort Saint-Francis, near Fort Henry, recently presented to the state of New York by Witherbee, Sherman & Co., to serve as a public park, and near which the permanent memorial to Samuel de Champlain will be erected by the joint commissions representing the states of New York and Vermont.

It has long been charged that the members of the Vermont Fish and Game league on their annual outings virtually decided the course of state politics for the following two years. There is no good reason in sight why the Champlain association may not compare notes and successfully solve the political tangles facing both Vermont and New York.—Burlington Free Press.

DOUBLING THE CORN YIELD.

Every Farmer Can Breed Better Grain, Says Wisconsin Authority.

If it is possible to increase the yield of corn from ten to thirty bushels per acre we should all be made aware of that fact in the shortest possible time, for it makes a great difference to the farmer who is on high priced land whether he is growing thirty-five bushels of corn per acre or sixty, says Professor R. A. Moore of the University of Wisconsin, writing in Farm and Fireside.

A large portion of the advanced yield of corn in Wisconsin has been brought about by using definite select breeds of corn dried seed that has high energy and vitality. Better culture has of course contributed to the result.

We cannot emphasize too much the importance of having seed corn grown in close proximity to where it is to be used. It usually takes several years' continual growing before corn becomes thoroughly acclimated to the surrounding environment of soil and climate, and if a radical change is made the corn will deteriorate.

As far as possible every farmer bred seed should grow and develop his own seed from year to year. His first efforts should be toward selecting for an ideal corn plant. He should have in his mind those special characteristics he desires to perpetuate. Such ideal corn plants are to be found in his general field. Their selection is the first step in corn breeding.

In order to do this well the farmer should go through the field, following definite rows, at a time when the plant will show its general characteristics to the best possible advantage. This is usually when the corn is in the milk, as then the leaf, ear and stalk can be studied to good advantage. We should select a medium stalk which puts out one good ear about three feet above the ground. The stalk should have numerous broad healthy leaves.

When the ideal stalk is found it should be marked so as to recognize the plant after the corn has ripened. After the first plant is found other plants are selected that conform closely to the first selected stalk. In this way 200 or 300 stalks are marked, and after the corn is well ripened the ears from them are picked and husked. The ears that are not uniform in character are rejected, and only those that show good type are saved for the second year's work. These ears should be thoroughly cured and put away where mice will not molest them or where they will not be subject to frequent variation in temperature.

The second step in corn breeding is known as the ear to the row method of breeding. For this we use the ears selected the previous year. The ears are tested for germination and only the strongly germinating ears kept. Of these the butts and tips are rejected, and the middle two-thirds of the ear is generally used.

Ground should be selected upon which similar crops have been grown from year to year so that the soil will be in a uniform condition. Each ear is planted in a separate row until 50 or 100 ears are used. The hills are an equal distance apart, and the same number of kernels, usually three, are planted to the hill.

The outcome is astonishing. Some of the ears of corn planted have the energy, vitality and projected efficiency to produce as much as ten times the amount of select seed corn that other sower ears are able to produce. The rows that are to be the heavy yielders of good seed corn early become noticeable for the general uniformity which they hold throughout the entire row.

The next year's seed corn should be secured from these high yielding rows, and it will transmit this special function of yield and perfection of ears to its progeny of the next year's crop.

A MEXICAN FIRE BRIGADE.

Leisurely Way They Fight the Flames at Matamoros.

It might be thought that such an exciting thing as a fire would startle the Mexicans out of their habitual indolence, but such is not the case.

The alarm of a fire at Matamoros, Coahuila, Mexico, was given by the discharge of numerous pistols and guns, says a writer in the Wide World Magazine, and I hastened to the scene, thinking at first that a battle was raging.

After a long interval, during which the people watched the fire with interest, chattering among themselves meanwhile, there appeared placidly trundling along the road the Matamoros equivalent of a fire engine, a barrel rolling along the ground, drawn by a reluctant burro.

A swivel pin in each end of the keg permitted it to roll freely, and ropes attached it to the animal. Behind walked the fire brigade, a solitary peon, bearing a bucket. Arrived at the scene of the conflagration, the water in the barrel was poured into buckets and hauled to the roof of an adjacent house, whence it was flung on to the flames.

Everybody was greatly excited. The calmest thing of all was the fire, which burned steadily on till there was nothing left to consume. Then as the spectacle was over the people dispersed. Every one was satisfied except perhaps the unfortunate owner of the house that had been destroyed.

Saving Plant Labels.

In endeavoring to secure a permanent label which would be at the same time cheap and easily prepared the following plan was hit upon, says a correspondent of House and Garden:

First secure a sufficient number of small bottles with corks. The small tubes that prepared photographic developers come in will do, or the one or two dram homeopathic vials may be secured at your druggist's. Wire and some small stakes with one end trimmed down to fit the necks of the bottles complete the equipment. Copper binding wire is best, as it is very pliable and does not corrode when exposed to the weather.

For the seed bed clip from the end of the seed package the strip bearing the name of the variety planted. Slip this into the bottle, cork tightly and wire to a stake at the end of the row, or if desired the bottle may be slipped over the end of the stake, as shown in the accompanying photograph.

For trees, shrubs, etc., the bottle inclosing a label written with indelible ink may be wired to a branch, twisting the wire tightly around the neck of the bottle and leaving a long loop for the branch. Labels attached in this way may be left in place for years with no danger of injury to the branch to which it is attached.
